Higher education task force reports

A press release from Tuesday, April 2, stated the Public Higher Education Task Force released a report of its findings on the strategic alignment of public higher education in New Hampshire, including short-term and longterm initiatives intended to reduce financial barriers, increase accessibility, drive the state's economy and ensure the foundation for an active and engaged citizenry in accordance with Executive Order 2023-06 issued by Gov. Chris Sununu. The task force, which was composed of leadership from the Community College System of New Hampshire (CCSNH) and University System of New Hampshire (USNH), state officials and industry leaders who solicited statewide input from various stakeholders, recommended long- and short-term initiatives, according to the press release.

Short-term initiatives include transfer credit and curricular alignment between CCSNH and USNH while expanding credit opportunities for experiential work, implementation of New England Commission of Higher Education (NECHE) accreditation for CCSNH as a single statewide college with locations throughout the state, the streamlining of admissions process to proactively accept CCSNH students with a predetermined GPA to USNH schools, notification of automatic acceptance to CCSNH for high school students, utilizing consistent admissions and financial aid processes for students of both systems, an increase in the use of online delivery to provide access to workforce opportunities, the recruitment of employers to assist graduates with loan repayments when they begin working, and co-locating the CCSNH and USNH system offices in a shared workspace to foster the streamlining and coordination of common administrative functions, according to the release.

Long-term initiatives include the implementation of a study on having the two systems under one governing board and one chancellor, developing a rolling six-year plan, updated every two years, the elimination of institutional competition through program duplication where duplicate programs are not needed, the expansion of online offerings and potential consolidation to a single platform across both systems, the examination of offering CCSNH courses and programs on USNH campuses and vice versa, improving transfer ability from CCSNH to USNH, and the analysis of physical assets and program utilization across both systems for space utilization and the potential for shared facilities, according to the same release. Visit governor. nh.gov for the entire report.

Medicare scams

In an April 5 press release, Attorney General John M. Formella issued a consumer alert for New Hampshire residents, especially New Hampshire Medicare recipients, warning of receiving multiple reports of scammers posing as Medicare representatives to obtain personal identifying information, The scammers ask whether the recipient has received a new Medicare card, and if the recipient states they have not the scammer then asks for the recipient's personal identifying information, including the recipient's Medicare and Social Security number, according to the same release.

Scammers can use the personal information obtained to perpetrate additional scams, engage in identity theft or commit additional crimes, including fraudulently accessing financial resources of the victim, according to the release.

Medicare is not issuing new cards to recipients in 2024, and Medicare does not make unsolicited calls to recipients asking for personal or private information. If you receive a call from anyone claiming to be calling on behalf of Medicare asking if you received a new Medicare card or seeking personal identifying information, it is a scam, and consumers who receive calls should hang up immediately, according to the release.

Call 1-800-MEDICARE (1-800-633-4227) for all Medicare-related inquiries. Complaints can be made to your local police department and by calling the Consumer Hotline at 271-3641 or by visiting doj.nh.gov/consumer/complaints/index.htm.

for children, has been renovated to accommodate the adult population, and reopened on Monday, April 1, bringing 12 more psychiatric beds online and increasing NHH capacity to 164 beds. Further renovations will bring six more beds online by May for a total capacity of 170 beds to serve adults. In a similar fashion the "F" unit continues with renovations, with the intention of NHH being at full capacity of 185 beds later in the year, according to the same release.

Increasing inpatient bed capacity is a component of "Mission Zero," the Department's plan to eliminate an occurrence known as "ED boarding," where people in acute behavioral health crisis seek care in medical emergency departments while they wait for care in another setting. This was a top focus outlined in New Hampshire's 10-Year Mental Health Plan.

MANCHESTER

Lori Weaver, DHHS Commissioner, said in a statement that "as we make steady advancements in our work toward eliminating ED boarding in New Hampshire, the increase in bed capacity at New Hampshire Hospital will help reduce wait times for people who need inpatient psychiatric care. However, inpatient ty-building is just one part of a multi-pronged effort to eliminate the wait list. The mental health system continues to make strides in many of our Mission Zero strategies that will help reduce the need for, and length of, inpatient psychiatric admissions." How to prepare for a hike Conditions on the trail are not like in your yard

Lt. Jim Kneeland is the Search and Rescue Team Leader and Coordinator at New Hampshire Fish and Game, and the Hike Safe Representative/Partner with the U.S. Forest Service. Visit hikesafe.com.

What is your advice for inexperienced hikers?

Depending on experience levels I always think that hiking in a group is obviously a good idea. Then you can bounce ideas off of one another when you're out on your excursion, like when to turn back or if you don't feel comfortable with the conditions. Or better yet if you're really inexperienced there are a list of guides that you can find online and going with an experienced guide, maybe taking your first time or two to kind of go through a safe way to go hiking ... in adverse conditions or basic conditions that you're not familiar with. That's another good way to gain some experience is to go with a guide.

Hiking enthusiasts [who] come from the south where their lawns might be green and the daffodils are coming out ... there are still a lot of times late into the spring [with] winter-like conditions and that means you should be prepared ... with clothing, footwear, traction devices, even after today you probably need snowshoes again here, even in April. That's the kind of thing we see people usually screw up here and that's the change of the seasons, being prepared for where ... different weather conditions that preserve wilderness areas they frequent? are still going on here in elevation.

What is a Hike Safe card?

A Hike Safe card is a way that we help fund search and rescue here in New Hampshire. Traditionally, prior to the advent of the Hike Safe card, the only way that Search and Rescue was financed was through this $1 surcharge on OHRV [Off-Highway Recreational Vehicle] registrations and boat registrations, and that wasn't eating the cost of search and rescue here in New Hampshire, so they came up with the voluntary Hike Safe card, which is a $25 per person or $35 per family Hike Safe Card which lets you support Search and Rescue in New Hampshire and actually has helped defray the cost of Search and Rescue placed upon the agency.

What should you do if you encounter a bear, bobcat, etc.?

We do have, obviously, bears, bobcats, coyotes, foxes, those kinds of things here in New Hampshire. It's very rare, you might see one, but it's very rare that you have an adverse interaction with one. Making noise, making yourself appear large, usually gets the animal to go the other way. I can't think of a time, there's only been a few occasions where ... not myself, but I have heard of bad interactions with people outdoors and that's typically because they surprised the animal or maybe even, in the instance of a bear, maybe got between a sow and its cub, but typically most wildlife doesn't hang around long enough.... Noise is my best advice.

What should Granite Staters do to help

They can visit websites through the Forest Service, Appalachian Mountain Club and whatnot to see the best ways to protect those fragile environments above treeline and that's basically staying on the trail, not trampling vegetation.... A lot of our trails are marked by rock cairns, which are piles of rock that mark the trails, and then in the summer months when you can see the granite that you're hiking on there's usually a painted blaze on the rock or a tree that depicts where the trail goes, so staying on marked trails.... Then obviously, no one likes to see garbage and stuff up on the trail. Take what you bring. It baffles me to go hiking and you see people putting dog poop in the green bags and leaving the bags on the side of the trail. If you're going to pack it in, you can pack it out, so that's my advice on trash....

Sox win big on left coast

The Big Story News Item – Sox Jump Out Fast: We're just 10 games in, so it's too early to call the surprise of Baseball 2024. But raise your hand if you had the Red Sox winning 7 of those 10 games. Especially since all 10 came on the West Coast. Most surprising has been the starting pitching, which had a collective ERA of 1.53, with the best being Tanner Houck and Nick Pivetta giving up just one run in four starts.

The only down so far was shortstop Trevor Story dislocating his shoulder diving for the ball Friday, and there is talk as I write this on Monday he could be lost for the season.

The second 10 games come at home vs. Baltimore, Anaheim and Cleveland. We'll know more after that.

Sports 101: Who holds the NBA record for playing the most consecutive games without fouling out?

News Item – Big Moment for Women's Basketball: TV ratings often signal when a sport has arrived as a force in American sports. Last Monday may have been that day for women's basketball as the grudge match between defending NCAA championship LSU and Iowa drew a largest-ever women's college basketball audience of 12.3 million TV viewers. The return engagement went to Iowa 94-87 behind 41 points by Caitlin Clark. That was followed by similar ratings winners when Iowa got by UConn amid a controversial ending (it was the right call) in the semi-final before losing to South Carolina in the title game on Sunday. A great week for women's basketball.

News Item – Keith Dickson: He's one of those guys who's been so good for so long it's hard to remember what came before him. For the retiring Keith Dickson that would be taking over at Saint Anselm in 1986 and going on to win 719 games with a .687 winning percentage, make the NCAA Tournament 22 times and take one trip to the Final Four. All the while never having even one team I can remember that did not exceed the sum of its parts. Best of all was the rivalry between the Hawks and SNHU during the tenure of Dickson and Stan Spirou that was an on-going treat for local college basketball fans.

Well done, young fella.

The Numbers:

30 – stolen bases in 33 career attempts for Red Sox speedster Jarren Duran after going for 6 out of 7 so far in 2024, when he's also batting .343.

400 – career goals scored by Bruins nudge Brad Marchand, a number that makes it hard to recall that the supposed to be Bruins star the year he was drafted was second overall pick Tyler Seguin. For the record: Seguin has lasted as long in Dallas but was 51 g's behind Marchand when he reached his milepost.

winning 7 of those 10 agames. Especially since all 10 came on the West Coast. Most surprising has been the Union over Portland.

10,000 – mark in career points reached by Jaylen Brown during his 26 effort in a 124-107 win over Portland.

... Of the Week Awards

Player of the Week: The Houston hurler Ronel Blanco gets it for the no-no he threw at Toronto last week in just his eighth MLB start, a 103-pitch, 7-strikeout gem.

Why Can't We Get Guys Like That Award: In Dalano Banton's first game since leaving Boston as part of the Xavier Tillman deal, the 6'9" point guard juiced the Celtics for 28 points and 9 assists Sunday. And it wasn't a one-game thing. In 28 games he's averaging 16 points, 3.3 assists and nearly 5 boards with Portland.

Sports 101 Answer: Most incorrectly believe that Wilt Chamberlain holds the record because he never fouled out even once. But he only played in 1,045 games in his career. And while Moses Malone had five early career foul-outs, he later played in 1,212 straight without fouling out.

A Little History – Wilt Chamberlain: While never fouling out is noteworthy, it's not the most amazing of Wilt's many records. It's that in 1961-62 when he scored 100 in one game and 50.4 points per game, he actually averaged more minutes per game than there are in a game as thanks to a few OT contests he averaged 48.5 per and would have played every second all year if he hadn't gotten tossed in one game after getting two T's for arguing with the refs.

Final Thought - Thumbs Up to Larry Lucchino: The greatest Red Sox team president passed away last week at 78 after a career of sports triumphs that included putting baseball back on the path to embrace its intimate ballpark, urban roots origins with the creation of Camden Yards as President of the Orioles. Conversely he was also smart enough to understand that Fenway Park was a jewel that should be saved and revitalized, not replaced. As for on the field, in my not so humble opinion he, not John Henry or Theo Epstein or Terry Francona, was the straw that stirred the drink that turned the Red Sox from perpetually frustrated losers to four-time champions this century. And they haven't been the same since he left after 2015. RIP.

Save it for next year, snow

Just in case we forgot where we lived, April started with a snowstorm. Last week's nor'easter brought snow, ice, winds, a snow day for many and more than 140,000 New Hampshire customers without electricity, according to an April 4 press release from the New Hampshire Department of Safety.

And then, an earthquake

A 4.8 magnitude earthquake on April 5 was centered in Whitehouse Station, New Jersey, but felt in New Hampshire, according to the U.S. Geological Survey in a report at earthquake.usgs.gov. On a map of the event, the government agency reported shocks felt throughout Vermont and New Hampshire. According to an April 5 report by the Washington Post, the geology of the Eastern Seaboard is extremely solid and rocky, which helped shockwaves travel an unusually long distance.

QOL score: -1 because the April 8 solar eclipse already had all of our "weird natural phenomenon" focus Comments: WMUR reported that people in Concord, Manchester, Nashua and other communities across the state felt the quake. New Hampshire was home to a Gilford-centered 2.2-magnitude quake on March 27, the WMUR story said.

Notable chef

Milford chef and restaurant owner Chris Viaud is one of the finalists for a James Beard Award. In an April 3 press release, the James Beard Foundation announced that Viaud, the chef and owner of Greenleaf and Ansanm in Milford and Pavilion in Wolfeboro, is a finalist in the Outstanding Restaurateur category. The award criteria describe an outstanding restaurateur as one "who uses their establishment(s) as a vehicle for building community, demonstrates creativity in entrepreneurship, integrity in restaurant operations, and is making efforts to create a sustainable work culture, while contributing positively to their broader community."

OOL score: +1

Comment: The winner of this award will be announced at the James Beard Award ceremony in Chicago in June.

Screens go dark

Chunky's Cinema Pub's locations in Nashua and Pelham will close on May 9, according to Facebook posts on those locations' pages and as reported by multiple media organizations. The Chunky's at 707 Huse Road in Manchester will thankfully remain open and gift cards can be used at that location (staff from Pelham and Nashua will also be offered positions in Manchester, the posts said). The Nashua location has been open for more than 17 years and the Pelham location has been open for 27 years, the posts said.

OOL score: -2

Comments: Nashua and Pelham locations will plan to go out in style with some screenings of modern classics — Labyrinth on April 29 at 7 p.m.; Dirty Dancing on April 30, at 7 p.m.; The Goonies on May 1 at 7 p.m.; The Big Lebowski on May 2 at 7:45 p.m., and Jaws on May 3 at 7 p.m.

EXPLORING PUBS

A LOOK AT SOME OF THE GATHERING SPOTS THAT OFFER THEIR OWN UNIQUE CHARACTER, ENTERTAINMENT AND, OF COURSE, BEER

By Michael Witthaus mwitthaus@hippopress.com

What is a pub? With a name derived from "public house," it's mainly a community gathering place. At the best ones, as the song goes, "everybody knows your name" and there are plenty of reasons to be there. A proprietor at one of the six area pubs profiled in this story spoke of theirs as a respite from stress at work or home: "If either of those aren't great, we're that third place."

Each has something that sets it apart and makes the place special — a signature dish, musical gathering or standout staff member. It all adds up to a vibe that can't be replicated. Much of it is by design, particularly in Manchester. A venerable watering hole is careful to schedule events that don't compete directly with other downtown spots, so everyone does well.

Another common thread is evolution, often disruptive, always necessary. A move to a new location, rising from a death blow delivered by the pandemic, switching things up with a new music night, expanding the spirits menu ahead of, not in response to, a boom, or cultivating a particular demographic that was previously neglected.

In the case of one venue getting ready open in May, disruptive evolution simply means taking a leap of faith, something each of these does every single day.

The Forum Pub: Friendly zone

When Area 23 opened mid-decade, it quickly became known as a hard place to find but definitely worth the effort. Set at the end of a winding road off State Street, decorated with offbeat bric-a-brac and offering a tastefully curated beer list along with craft ciders and a smart pub menu, it also welcomed the Concord music scene. More than a few performers got their start there, and jam sessions were a magnet for creatives of all stripes.

Last year, however, owner Kirk McNeil was forced to move, due to what he called "irreconcilable differences" with his landlord. In early October he began occupying a space that formerly was an Asian restaurant in Penacook's Thirty Pines Plaza. With a vibe much different than the cavernous Area 23, McNeil gave it a new name, The Forum Pub.

Before deciding on the change, McNeil asked one of his regulars to identify Area 23's "main feature," he recalled while standing behind the bar in mid-March, during the Forum Pub's third week of business. "He said, 'you could have good discussions with people; it wasn't just a lot of sports on TV, a lot of people getting frustrated about this thing or that thing. You could actually have discussions.' I said, 'I think you just named it.'"

That said, Forum Pub is a haven for civil discourse; a House Rules list at the end of the bar includes "No Politics." This is aimed at anyone "who's not listening but only talking," McNeil said. "I'm happy to talk about policies ... we can talk about whether or not you think this thing or that thing should happen. What makes it a better show? I just don't want to talk about why this nimrod or that nincompoop should be running the show."

The process of moving 3 1/2 miles down the street wasn't easy.

"As we all know, New Hampshire doesn't have a ton of available real estate right now," McNeil noted, and regulatory hurdles were also challenging. What saved the day were his people. "The best part of this entire move has been our staff, because a bunch of cooks and bartenders and sound men and servers ... became construction workers and decorators."

Adjustments between the new and old location include live music. There's a nicely lit stage, an expertly tweaked sound system, but less room means solo, duo and trio performances instead of raucous bands. Don Bartenstein hosts a weekly song circle in the center of the room, there's a growing list of Wednesday night singer-songwriter nights, and Saturday open mic is back, but no one's loading in big amps anymore.

One upside of relocating is that the kitchen is four times the size of the old one, increasing the number of menu options.

"We're doing some pretty terrific food here; we don't have anything on the menu that I don't like," McNeil said. Among the customer favorites is an item that was also popular at Area 23. "I can't say enough good things about the gyro; we do our own lamb roast."

McNeil's daughter Anastasia, home from college, echoed her father's sentiments. "My friend Raphael is Greek as the day is long," she said. "He took one bite and ran to get the chef to tell him it was the best gyro he's ever had stateside."

The Local: Rebirth in Warner

Like a lot of places, The Local, a small but scrappy and vibrant restaurant/bar on Main Street in Warner, couldn't survive the pandemic. Owner Bill Meadows packed things up in May 2021. "We got through it

The Local

15 Main St., Warner

Must-try: Eggroll of the day Big fun: Wednesday trivia and back," he said by phone in late March. "When everything opened back up, we had people, but we were just so burned out by then that it just wasn't worth continuing."

As its name implies, it was more than a watering hole, and the community felt its absence. Meadows took a corporate job on the Seacoast, where he was frequently reminded why The Local was special. Its staff felt more like family, not a branch in an org chart.

"It's not like going into a generic restaurant and being waited on by somebody you've never seen before," he said. "You're seeing the same people as when you came in a month, two months ago. It's not just the food, the beer, the music; actually, it's the staff bringing people back."

When an opportunity to reopen came, in the form of another Main Street restaurant coming available, Meadows jumped. He and the owner of The Foothills began talking, and on October 13, 2023, The Local's sign, featuring an arm wreath with two hands gripping mugs in a toast, came out of retirement.

It's a bigger place, Meadows beamed.

"It's an actual restaurant," he said. "We were running the old Local out of a vanilla commercial space as best we could, but there were always restrictions, mostly with refrigeration ... we could barely bring in enough stuff to last until our next delivery."

Now there are more food specials, like a daily eggroll and burger, along with a doubling of beer taps, which Meadows has filled with all-local offerings.

"Our favorite thing to do is work with independents, breweries I go directly to for beer," he said. "No. 1, it's a great story, and No. 2, it's not stuff people are going to find other places."

Live music resumed recently, with April Cushman, Charlie Chronopoulos, Ryan Williamson and others appearing every Thursday night, courtesy of NH Music Collective's talent service.

"It's been really handy because booking was ... it wasn't difficult, but it was time-consuming," Meadows said, so NHMC's approach was welcome. "They book us great acts, and we don't really have to do anything, so it works out."

Along with that, Meadows leads a weekly trivia night on Wednesdays like he's hosting a house party, surrounded as he is by mostly familiar faces.

"Our complete customer base came back when we reopened," he said, adding that The Foothills' old crowd still comes in.

Nine-to-five life compelled Meadows to rethink how he'd run The Local anew.

"I learned in a couple of years working for other people [about] things I used to do as a manager, not even knowing how toxic they were and how they affected other people, until I was that other person," he said. "I came in with a completely different mindset as far as how to run a restaurant from a management standpoint; more how not to do it and trying to get away from that."

The Barley House: New notes

As befits New Hampshire's Capital City, Concord's Barley House is packed with a mixture of locals and out-of-towners during the work week. On a recent Wednesday just past six o'clock, the bar included two men who earlier in the day were at the Statehouse talking over beers and burgers. Nearby, a couple from Cleveland who were attending an academic book conference at the Grappone Center considered a bowl of the pub's signature Guinness Beef Stew.

"Definitely all walks of life," said Nikki Miller, a longtime bartender at the North Main Street mainstay. Every Friday night, though, is locals' time, she said. "A group of people in the community, they just take over the bar; they love it here. There's also a ton of bar regulars, middle-aged people, and I'd say we do have some younger folk."

It's a less raucous vibe than in past years, she continued, meaning before the pandemic. "We're not open late anymore," she said. "People typically aren't coming late to the Barley House, or dare I say, going out late anymore in Concord at all. It's a changed place."

The Barley House is very much an Irish pub. An ample supply of Redbreast, Green Spot and Jameson is always on hand, and St. Patrick's Day is the North Star of their annual calendar. This year's came on Sunday, a day they've been closed in the past. That changed this year, but Miller and her team weren't sure what to expect.

To their relief, "it was a great day," she said. "We didn't have any troublemakers anywhere. Everyone was having a good time, eating great food. We had Irish step dancers, and the Irish session players for three hours. Then we had a DJ in our downstairs bar; I think a good time was had by all"

A weekly Tuesday night gathering of Irish musicians, led by Eugene Durkee, was around before the pandemic. "Right now, we have about eight men and women that come in on a rotating basis," Miller said. "They're playing Celtic music, and it really just brings an awesome vibe to our dining space."

Recently, regular live music, which ended many years ago, returned to the Barley House. Acoustic performers began appearing downstairs on Fridays and Saturdays. "We all feel now that the world has returned to its new normal, so we decided to be creative in bringing people back," Miller said. "Making it a place where you want to go in the community again ... I think bringing music back was just the way to do it."

Food-wise, the pub's burgers are a constant favorite.

"I always tell my customers we have a top five burger list, which is not helpful to anyone trying to make a decision," Miller said. Another recent addition is a personal deep-dish pizza with allegedly addictive qualities. "I don't think anyone expected it to take off the way it did ... it's this funny little thing; people are like, 'do you have it? I need it. I'm here for the pizza.""

Still and all, a tight-knit staff on a firstname basis with so many of its customers is what sets the venerable downtown pub apart for Miller. "We say it's not a Barley House, but it's a Barley Home."

Strange Brew Tavern: Peaceful coexistence

How does a business endure, let alone a pub? The National Restaurant Association reports an 80 percent failure rate within five years of opening. One local beat the odds. On April 6, Strange Brew Tavern marked its 25th anniversary. For pub owner Mitch Sawaya, however, the biggest milestone was making it to the end of Year 1.

He started in 1999 in a building that had stood empty for eight years, living on the third floor while he slowly built it out. Early days were quiet, but certain moments gave him hope, like when area restaurant workers stopped by after their shifts for a bite.

"I knew if we were doing something that attracted them we had a chance of making it, because they're kind of harsh critics," Sawaya said in a recent phone interview.

Fast forward to 2000. Strange Brew survived and, judging by a line snaking around the block on Market Street to mark the moment, was thriving. Sawaya could exhale a bit. "I thought, 'You know what? I think we're going to do OK, we'll be here for a while.' That was a big one; it was the first time I really felt comfortable or confident."

As for lasting two and half decades, Sawaya worked to set Strange Brew apart from other Manchester bars, beginning with a big beer list.

"I had 18 draft lines when I opened, which everybody thought was ridiculous," he said. With the craft beer boom years off, "I couldn't fill them, but I refused at that point to put domestics on tap; I still do."

Sawaya also vowed to make his pub the go-to place for blues and R&B fans, partly because he's a fan. A favorite memory is booking Dennis Brennan; he'd followed the Boston guitarist since his days in The Martells. "What was even more odd is he was with some guys that I knew really well, and he told them that he remembered me," he said. "I was blown away."

Another reason for leaning into the genre, which includes a Howard Randall-hosted blues jam every Sunday and live acts every Friday and Saturday, is that Sawaya believes staying in his lane helps the overall downtown scene. Early on, he did a press interview that said as much. The next day the owners of the now-defunct Black Brimmer stopped by to thank him.

"They said, 'That's the best thing we've ever heard,' which was great," he said. "We made a point not to book the same bands or do the same things on the same night. They'd have Mama Kicks every Wednesday, so we just steered away from that sort of thing. I think it was good for everybody. There were lines to get into all those places."

These days, Jordan Quinn, along with Scott Armstrong, hosts a music open mic on Wednesdays. "Everybody loves her; I think she's been the most successful person with it," Sawaya said, noting that there's a similar Thursday comedy gathering. "It's grown significantly; it's really open mic, anybody can get up on stage, and occasionally a couple of the big guys from Boston will come down to test out material."

Some of the best recollections are from the many New Hampshire primaries he's seen. "I always tell the story about John Kerry," he said. "I had a Tufts banner hanging in the corner because that's where I went to college, and he saw it. His son and his daughter went to Tufts, and he asked the significance of the banner. They told him the owner had gone there, so he grabbed me and bought us a beer.... We spent 45 minutes talking about growing up in Massachusetts."

Another time, Drew Barrymore had dinner at Strange Brew, but Sawaya couldn't be coaxed to ask for an autograph. He did meet Chris Matthews when the MSNBC host did a bunch of shows there, along with Tom Brokaw and Boston Globe columnist turned television pundit Mike Barnacle, who gave his burgers a television shoutout. "Those are huge things," he said. "All these people were coming out of the woodwork for the elections."

Asked about the future, Sawaya said, "I intend to keep going for a while," noting that recently he's put a lot of focus on food offerings; the Jambalaya and Guinness Meatballs are customer favorites.

Musically, he's tried a few new things, like recently bringing in the youthful River Sang Wild for a night.

"I'll always have entertainment, multiple nights a week," Sawaya said. "I'm going to keep playing around to see what works. I have a son who will be 18 in July, and he's not interested in being part of the business. I've got to figure that out. I'd like to be around for quite a few more years."

Wild Rover: Hometown handoff

Manchester's bar and restaurant community is very collegial. A good example of this is the way Jesse Twarjan purchased the Wild Rover, the landmark Irish pub on Kosciuszko Street. A musician and entrepreneur who manages a few downtown residential properties, among other things, the "Manch-ghanistan born and raised" Twarjan has a long history here.

In a recent phone interview he talked about bumping into Bonfire owner Patrick Mills outside his Elm Street restaurant. "I made a passing comment like, 'Oh, maybe I'll call Bob for a shift or two at the Rover," he recalled, referring to pub owner Robert Scribner. "I believe Patrick's words were, 'He might sell it to you.' That's how the whole thing started."

The deal was friendly and might not have happened otherwise.

"It wasn't necessarily something that Bob was looking to advertise for sale," Twarjan said. "It's a place that requires the right kind of person, an owner-operator type of situation where people want to come in and see familiar faces, that type of thing."

Twarjan took over the pub, which has been in business since 1990, on St. Patrick's Day. With an outdoor liquor license in flux, everything happened inside, but crowds still showed up for what's always their biggest day of the year. "We were at capacity all day," he said. "It was a great vibe."

With that essential celebration out of the way, an official grand opening is in the works, though the new owner is quiet on the details. He hopes it will happen before the end of April. To prepare for it, there will be new coats of paint, as he works on a stepped-up liquor offering and a reshuffling of the beer list.

Notso Costley Productions will manage live music, though Twarjan is ready to jump in when needed.

"We have them as a focal point every weekend, and they always have a rotating cast of extremely talented players," he said. "My musician past leads me to have a fairly wide network of what I would consider to be extraordinarily talented people. They know if you're going to come in here you'd better play as well as me or I'll do it myself."

Former chef Jeff Volker has been recruited to help with revamping the menu. Twarjan, who's an alum of culinary-centric Johnson & Wales University, has big plans.

"We're really going to lean hard into some of that Irish flair and fare," he said, adding that Volker will strive to make the Wild Rover "the best place in town for fish and chips or shepherd's pie.... We'll be consolidating and doing it correctly. That comes down to quality over quantity, specifically with the kitchen."

That said, the Rover won't be going head-to-head with the downtown's fine dining places. Twarjan's thoughts go back to the way he acquired the bar.

"We need to be more collaborative instead of competitive in terms of making sure that there's enough of a demographic out there for all of us to enjoy," he said. "We're definitely trying to fill some gaps in the food and make sure that we're doing quality pub fare to a very high degree."

Pembroke City Limits: Born in a barn

Even though he can't play a note, Rob Azevedo has an absolute passion for music. Seemingly his every waking hour is focused on it, whether he's hosting his Granite State of Mind radio show every Friday night, blogging about a new local act he's excited about, or gathering a bunch of his friends to do a Tom Petty or Stones tribute concert at the Shaskeen or Rex Theatre in Manchester.

Lately Azevedo has been hosting shows in his barn, adjacent to the house in Pembroke where he moved a few years back. They're intimate affairs, with typically fewer than 100 people in attendance. Most are people he already knows, but a few new faces always show up, which got him thinking.

Which led to a new venture, his wildest and most ambitious yet.

Pembroke City Limits will present live events, everything from concerts to book signings and poetry readings, five days a week. Azevedo is putting the finishing touches on a space on Pembroke Village's Main Street, originally an 1800s general store that most recently sold antiques. He's been eveing the spot for over a year.

"It was either going to be this place or it wasn't going to happen," he said in late March. Granite State of Mind will broadcast live every Friday, and initially acoustic acts will provide the music.

"We have four residents upstairs and we want to see how the sound is going to work," Azevedo said, adding that all the pieces are coming together. "Rough plumbing is done, that's huge; fire and electrical are updated; the next thing is drywall, and then get the kitchen and bar together. We're hoping to be open by mid-May."

During a walk-through, Azevedo pointed out the charming space's many features, like hardwood floors, exposed brick and lots of ambient light, while discussing what it will look like when finished. A stage and seating area will be on the right. A bar serving a selection of area craft beer and wine will

Rather than operate a kitchen, he asked Kelly Sue LeBlanc's Sleazy Vegan for help.

"I don't know anything about food or cooking, but I love food trucks," he said, "so I found one of the best food trucks around."

Also on the team are Paulie Stone, a musician who'll assist with that side of things, and Azevedo's business partner, Eric Klesper. The new proprietor has big dreams for his little village, hoping it mirrors the growth he saw in Newmarket when the mills there were renovated. He's grateful for an understanding wife.

"She knows I lost my mind sometime in the early '90s, but I don't feel overwhelmed," he said. "I've been ready for a number of years to do this ... I feel no anxiety about it. I ask my wife, why am I not crapping my pants? She says, 'Because vou're ready.""

Art connections

Currier curates a conversation

By Michael Witthaus mwitthaus@hippopress.com

When Lorenzo Fusi joined the Currier Museum of Art in February 2023 as Chief Curator, one of his first exhibitions was "Distant Conversations." It looked at the elective affinities between painter Ella Walker and ceramicist Betty Woodman, by displaying their works side by side.

Its success led to this year's exhibition, which pairs painter Filippo de Pisis with photographer Robert Mappelthorpe. The latter is better known, mainly due to his often controversial photos. In a phone interview with the Hippo, Italy-born Fusi said he included de Pisis "to present and premiere the work of an Italian artist who I think is very influential and important beyond the borders of Italy." Here's an edited version of the interview.

Separated by years, Mappelthorpe and de Pisis never met. What do you think connects them artistically?

Mapplethorpe traveled multiple times to Italy, and I think most of these affinities originated by looking at the same work and the same monuments, the same kind of archaeological references which are basically sitting deep in Western art history. I think that most likely is the reason why there are so many uncanny similarities between the two of them.

What are some of the other elements linking them?

Each of them came from some form of prejudice. I would say de Pisis at one moment in time has been considered a bit too delicate ... maybe too soft in his representation. By imposition, I think Mapplethorpe was considered too hard, too in your face, too confrontational. I think both of them have been stigmatized for this almost opposite way in which they come into art. And ironically, [via this] completely opposite or antagonist approach, they do produce work which is actually very ... similar aesthetically. So I think this is not only an opportunity to discover de Pisis as an artist who has not been shown extensively in the United States, but also an opportunity to revisit Mapplethorpe's work from a different ... perspective.

They were both very purposeful in their approach.

Yes, intentional, and very deliberate in the way they wanted to represent something. If you start entering into that mindset, even the more graphic images of Mapplethorpe, and we have only one image from the more controversial portfolios ... Joe Rubberman, the very famous picture of a man wearing a vinyl outfit laying down flat on a bench. It's a very classical pose [and] although it looks very morbid and very sexual, as a matter of fact, this pose can be seen in hundreds of examples of art historical references, even though it might be very much in your face when you start looking at it.... The idea [is] to create an image that is transtemporal and it stays as an almost art historical testament. You don't see the sexuality of it anymore. You don't see the reference to this very murky underworld of gay life in New York in the '70s and '80s, you see a very iconic image of a body that could be Etruscan, could be ancient Roman or Greek. That's where I think he stops being controversial and starts being an artist in a sense.

When did you know you were on the right track and this would be an impactful exhibition?

going back to Lotte Jacobi, the first photography curator... I was surprised when I first moved to the Currier that we didn't have any Mapplethorpe in our collection because undeniably he's an American master of photography. I was looking at [how] we could incorporate some work by Mapplethorpe into the collection, but also ... overcoming the prejudice associated with the more controversial reception of his photography. At the same time ... I wanted to do something with de Pisis in the United States because he was an overlooked artist who I think should be represented. The moment of realization [came while] separately looking at the work. In my mind I had this crystallization that some of the images were very, very similar, and the more I delved into that, the more similarities I found. I think the moment for me when I became absolutely sure that it was a good exhibition or a good approach was when I showed it to a colleague of mine in Italy who immediately saw the poetry and the lyricism in this association, and he asked me to continue to do that research. Then I shared it with my team. They all saw how close the elective affinity is between these two artists, which is most surprising considering the time gap and geographical gap between the two of them. So it has not been a single moment of revelation, but multiple moments of affirmation that have happened from people who were not as yet in the project but could see immediately how powerful the association was.

Kids will also be introduced to the instruments of the orchestra, according to their website. Listeners of all ages are invited. Visit nco-music.org.
- Four Seasons in April: Catch one or both of the candlelight concerts at the Rex Theatre (23 Amherst St., Manchester, palacetheatre.org) on Wednesday, April 17. At 6 p.m. it's "Vivaldi's Four Seasons and More" and at 8:30 p.m. the show is "A Tribute to Adele." Tickets to either show cost $43 to $60. Zachary Lewis

SONGS AND STORIES

Singer-songwriter William Florian presents an evening of music and stories that is the final concert of the Concord Community Concert 2023-24 season on Saturday, April 13, at 7:30 p.m. at the the City Auditorium, according to a press release. The show will include the music of The New Christy Minstrels, Peter, Paul & Mary, John Denver, Neil Diamond, The Beatles, Pete Seeger, The Mamas & The Papas, and uplifting originals presented with amusing stories in an intimate performance, according to the press release. In a statement, Florian said "there is a lot of power behind the meanings of these songs. They continue to be relevant today, but they also bring you back to a specific time in your life. They bring up feelings and memories that make you smile." Tickets are $20 at the door, $23 online, free for those under 18, with tickets at the door available up to 90 minutes before showtime. NSquared is home for modern dance

By Zachary Lewis zlewis@hippopress.com

ARTS

Dance, artistic movement of the human body, is one of humankind's oldest forms of expression throughout all cultures. NSquared Dance, a contemporary dance company based in Manchester, believes in the power of dance and advocates for this ancient art form in the Granite State.

Zackery Betty, Artistic Director of NSquared Dance, spoke about how it's "a company that's really driven to bring awareness [of] the joy of dance but also the art of dance and be able to share it through empowerment, encouragement for community members, for other dancers and also for audience-goers."

NSquared Dance is a nonprofit that Zackery Betty and his husband, Nick Neagle, who is the founder and creative director, brought up from New York City. Neagle is a New Hampshire native and both Betty and Neagle are "excited to make [New Hampshire] our home," Betty said. "You don't need to go to this giant metropolis in order to fulfill a life for dance. It is viable within the smaller communities and the cities [in New Hampshire] that still have a lot to give."

Betty and Neagle both graduated from Marymount Manhattan College in New York City, he said, and "[NSquared Dance] was [Neagle's] senior thesis ... to create a company, and he did the business plan ... based out of Boston but then he just really transposed it to fit more in the New Hampshire area.... Through trials and tribulations we've now come to have a brand new outlook."

That outlook involves a myriad of dance styles.

"We actually are pretty happy to capitalize on our different types of genres," Betty said. "We specialize in contemporary dance and modern but we do have a very strong tap background. We also can do jazz, ballet ... checkmark [all] the dance genres except for no folk or ballroom dance, that's not our

They do have a specialty in their choreography, which springs from unique starting

"Sometimes it starts with a costume. Sometimes it starts with a music inspiration and other times it will start with either a story or an idea," Betty said.

NSquared's next performance will be on Saturday, April 13, at the Amato Center for the Performing Arts in Milford for the New England Inspirational Dance Festival run by Saving Grace Dance Ensemble.

"The New England Inspirational Dance Festival is a celebration of dance through inspiration," Betty said. "Saving Grace Dance has presented several different platforms for dance companies and dance crews to come perform. We're bringing one of our works that we did in February ... it's just a duet, but it's a duet that brings light to what possibly could be dance in another realm ... a higher realm."

Betty and Neagle are selective yet open-minded about who becomes an NSquared Dancer.

"We are a very open and encompassing group...," Betty said. "We look through a lens of joy mixed with technique. We have a very strong technical background underneath for all of the dancers. That doesn't necessarily mean that all of our dancers have gone to college for dance, but we do have a large group of them that have.... We look for storytelling in relation to being able to use your voice within a room as a creative and as an advocate for the art of dance. We look for someone who can bring both of those aspects into the studio and the stage."

After the Festival, NSquared will premiere The Lavender Scare in collaboration with dancers through New Hampshire Dance Collaborative at the Rex Theatre in Manchester in June.

As it happens, at NSquared "all of our dancers were born and raised here in New Hampshire except for myself and our rehearsal director," Betty said. "It's really nice to have that local group of people.... It's nice to pride ourselves that we are locally born and raised for dancers."

ON THE JOB

CHANTELLE MORIN

JEWELRY MAKER AND OWNER OF CCMDESIGNS IN NASHUA (@CCMDESIGNSFORYOU)

Explain your job and what it entails.

I make handmade beautiful items. I like to do sun-catchers and car charms. So I am just sitting at my desk ... creating beautiful things every day.

How long have you had this job? Three years.

What led you to this career field and your current job?

Honestly, I taught myself jewelry at 16. Three years ago I broke my ankle and had Covid at the same time.... I was really bored in the house so I took everything out and here we are.

What kind of education or training did you need?

All self-taught with jewelry. And You-Tube. YouTube was great. YouTube helped.

What is your typical at-work uniform or attire?

Comfy, comfy pj's.

What is the most challenging thing about your work, and how do you deal with it?

Working the fairs. I have fibromyalgia. So my body is always telling me I can't do it 'cause everything is always hurting. So rest, lots of water and just keep pushing through it and the joy of meeting everybody and selling makes me happy, that's how I push through.

What do you wish you had known at the beginning of your career?

How expensive beads are. It's pretty expensive. When I did my taxes this year I was very surprised at what I'd spent on tools and supplies. It's expensive.

What do you wish other people knew about your job?

I wish people that are creative and have an idea just go for it. I remember one day I had a friend who wanted to make earrings and she goes, 'What do I do first?' and I said, 'You just have to start,' so I wish people would just start.

What was your first job?

Working for the Telegraph [The Nashua Telegraph] delivering papers.

What is the best piece of work-related advice you've ever received?

Probably from my dad, who was in the military, and it was, just be the hardest worker I can be. If it's slow, you should be doing something. Always be working.

Dear Car Talk:

When towing, the center differential makes all the difference

By Ray Magliozzi

I just read your recent answer about how to tow vehicles with automatic transmissions. It my parents' RV trips vears ago, where they towed a '95 Jeep Cherokee with an automatic transmission behind the RV. The transfer case was in Neutral while being towed, and I don't remember about the transmission itself. Was that acceptable or was that causing wear or damage to the drivetrain? — Stuart

Well, since they got away with it, I'm going to conclude that it wasn't that bad, Stuart. In 1995, the Jeep Cherokee was an old-style four-wheel-drive vehicle. That means it did not have a center differential. Modern all-wheel-drive vehicles have center differentials, with all four wheels connected to the power train all the time. For those vehicles, we recommend flat-bed towing exclusively.

But on the old Cherokee, by putting the transfer case in Neutral, you could literally disconnect the front drive shaft (and front wheels) from the rest of the drive train. That way, the front wheels could turn freely without being connected to the transmission.

So, if your folks put the transfer case in made me think about Neutral and lifted the rear wheels of the Cherokee off the ground, and towed it (facing backward) with its front wheels on the ground, that would have been perfectly safe.

> If they towed it on all four wheels behind their RV, even with the transmission in Neutral, then the rear driveshaft would have been turning the components of the automatic transmission. And while it wouldn't necessarily ruin the transmission, it would cause the transmission to heat up. The transmission only gets cooled when the engine is running, so towing it - especially if it was at highway speed for hours at a time — certainly could have shortened the transmission's life. How could you know for sure? You'd have to track down the person your parents sold the car to and ask them. But I would definitely conceal your number when you call, just in case they're still steamed about it.

Dear Donna.

Is this record player a throw-away? Would someone use this still? Thank you for any help.

Amv

Dear Amy,

My No. 1 rule is there is almost always a reason to save things from the past.

Your Webcor Lark record player is from the 1950s. Being a portable one, it does have its charm.

To determine whether there is value, vou have to consider its overall condition. whether it is a complete unit, and whether you can find a new home for your player. it's in working condition.

Let's just say yes is the answer to all. The value would be in the $75 range to a record or player collector. If it's not in working for any working parts.

selling and more information.

I hope this was helpful, Amy, and that aol.com, or call her at 391-6550.

Donna Welch has spent more than 35 vears in the antiques and collectibles field, appraising and instructing. Her new locacondition I would say there's some value tion is an Antique Art Studio located in Dunbarton, NH where she is still buying I think for marketing it I would start at and selling. A great French baking contest

This year's theme is plays and musicals

By John Fladd jfladd@hippopress.com

How much do you know about the French-speaking world other than France or Quebec and could you express that knowledge in a cake?

On May 18, 10 teams of amateur bakers will have an opportunity to do just that at the Franco-American Centre's Third Annual Fleur Délices, a cake-decorating competition dedicated to spreading knowledge about the Francophone world. Teams will bring everything they need to build elaborately decorated cakes with a French or French-influenced theme.

"This goes hand-in-hand with our mission at the Franco-American Centre," said Nathalie Hirte, the event's organizer, "to introduce people to the world outside the France/Ouebec box."

For the event's first year the Fleur Délices' theme was French-speaking countries around the world, Hirte said.

"Last year, it was fairy tales; this year our theme is Plays and Musicals of the French-Speaking World," she said. "What's happened in the past is the contestants have looked at our suggestion list, then gone and picked something else completely. As long as their cakes meet our criteria, they're good."

Fleur Délices — the name, which indicates "delicate and delicious," is a pun; it sounds like "Fleur de Lis," the symbol of France — is inspired by The Great British

Third Annual Fleur Délices

When: Event is May 18. Bakers' registration closes Friday, April 26, at 5 p.m. More: Franco-American Centre, 100 St. Anselm Drive, Manchester, facnh.com, 204-7680

Baking Show, a television baking competition known for its creativity and kindness. Like its inspiration, Fleur Délices will require competitors to make and present cakes, but unlike the television show, there will be no baking on site.

"None of the venues we've held the event at have ovens," Hirte said. Competitors will bake their cakes at home, then bring them to the event along with frosting and any edible elements they need to put their finished cakes together. Teams can have one or two participants. Single-person teams will have an hour to decorate their cakes; pairs will have 45 minutes.

Each cake must have a minimum of two tiers, and one of them must be a sponge. ("That's another influence from the British Baking Show," Hirte said.) The icing must include at least one buttercream. All cakes must have a 3D element that is made from an edible material. Other than that, the organizers have not been overly specific about their requirements.

"We didn't want to limit the bakers' creativity," Hirte said. "We just want them all on a level playing field."

Two or three judges will walk around during the competition, visiting teams at their stations and asking questions. They will judge individual cakes on taste, texture, overall appearance, creativity and their representation of the theme. The overall winner of the competition will be chosen from an average of the judges' scores and will be presented with an engraved cake platter.

A People's Choice winner will be chosen by the spectators. Because it will not be possible for every spectator to taste each cake, the People's Choice winner will be based almost entirely on appearance.

"We guarantee that everyone will get two to three samples," she said. "The last two years, nobody has left hungry. We always get positive feedback on the event." The People's Choice winner will be presented with a charcuterie board.

Fleur Délices is open to bakers 16 and older.

"The past couple of years we've had some French teachers and their students compete," Hirte says. "That's been fun."

Registration for competitors is $20 per team and is open until Friday, April 26, on the Franco-American Centre's website. Tickets for spectators will go on sale within the next week or so through the same website.

A pint of jalapeños A springtime tradition at Concord Craft Brewing

By John Fladd jfladd@hippopress.com

Dennis Molnar, co-owner of Concord Craft Brewing. says weather plays a bigger role in running a brewery than you might think.

"Most people, unless they're die-hards, are pulled toward lighter beers," he said of spring beer drinkers. Which explains the Jalapeño Cream Ale.

Molnar said one of the challenges of making specialty seasonal beers is knowing how much to make, and when to make it.

"We get people getting in touch with us all the time. asking, 'Why can't you make the Jalapeño year-round, or why can't you make that very rich, heavy porter all year round?' It's hard to know what the right amount to make is, before people's tastes change," he said.

The Jalapeño Cream Ale originally started as a tribute to Cinco de Mayo, Molnar said, but after several years customers started to think of it as a generally springtime beer.

"It's a Golden Ale," he said. "It's on the lighter side, which makes it popular for warmer weather. We use real jalapeños and let it age [with the chiles] for several weeks. There's a little bit of spice there, but not so much that you can't finish your dinner or anything."

Before the Jalapeño this year, there was the maple-season-themed Logger Lager.

"Most years, in the late winter/early spring, we make a bourbon barrel-aged maple brown ale," Molnar said, "but we had trouble getting barrels this year." Instead the brewery put out a mazen, a German-style, small brewers [like us] make unpasteurized beers. That means that the yeast ferments out the maple sugars, and you're left with a more subtle maple flavor." One of the advantages of running a small brewery is having the freedom to test out new ideas, Molnar said.

"We can make a small batch and see how it works out," he said. At the moment, he and his team are thinking about something new for the summer, a cherry wheat beer.

"It should be a fun, light, bright-colored beer," he said. "We've finally got a good source for cherry purée."

During the summer the brewery's customers drink beers that are lighter in color, texture and percentage of alcohol, but in the fall they start drinking heavier porters and

"Our Squirrel Fights Nut Brown Ale is really popular," Molnar said, "and Apple Crisp — like the dessert — Porter is one of our most popular fall beers. We almost always brew a pumpkin beer, too. Some people really like pumpkin beers around that time of year. A lot of them don't actually like eating pumpkin, but they love seeing it in a glass."

Right now, the flavor of the moment is jalapeño. Because it has become identified so strongly with springtime, it will be around for the rest of the season.

"We'll have it in stores until the beginning of June," Molnar said, "and on tap for a little longer."

DRINKS WITH JOHN FLADD

The Right Tie: A Cocktail Parable

Charlie was definitely out of his element.

Never mind that he'd worn a suit maybe three times in his life and one of those had been a rented powder-blue tux. This blazer cost as much as he earned in a month. He looked at his reflection in the mirror again, hoping he'd see something vaguely

"Dress for the job you want." Isn't that what they say? But looking at himself, he could only hope that someone was hoping to hire a pudgy, nervous-looking kid on the verge of hyperventilating.

He looked at the price tag on the cuff of the jacket again, and tried to breathe deeply.

"I really don't think—," he started to say.

"Hush!" said the saleslady with authority. She was an older woman — of course, Charlie was still young enough that anyone over 35 was old, but she had clearly been doing this a long time and seemed to know what she was doing.

She turned him around, away from the mirror, then flipped up the collar of his shirt and quickly, with the ease of years of practice, looped a necktie around his neck, knotted it, then flipped his collar back down.

She turned him back to the mirror, but before he could take in any of the details of his appearance she tucked a pocket square into the breast pocket of the jacket, then stepped back and said, "How's that?"

Charlie was stunned. It wasn't so much that there was a dramatic change in who he saw in the mirror — still a young, round face — but this time it belonged to a better version of Charlie. It was a mature, confident Charlie. No, Charles, maybe, although only his mother had ever called him that and only when she was angry with him. This was a young man who knew what he was doing, a man who could get through an interview and wait for the person on the other side of the desk to explain what they had to offer him.

The saleswoman nodded with satisfaction. "The right tie makes all the difference,"

The Right Tie

she said.

³/₄ ounce top-shelf rum – I used a 15-yearold Barbancourt

1½ ounces apple brandy – I like Laird's Applejack

3/4 ounce fresh squeezed lime juice

³/₄ ounce orgeat (almond syrup)

Combine all ingredients over ice in a cocktail shaker.

Shake gently. You want to chill this cocktail — if possible, without breaking up the ice.

Pour into a rocks glass.

This is a serious, booze-forward cocktail. Even the small amount of extra-good rum makes itself known. The apple brandy fades into the background, giving just a hint of subtle fruitiness and even more of an alcoholic backbone. Lime and almond get along very well and will work with either of these liquors, to say nothing of both of them.

And yet.

The combination as a whole is very intense — a little more boozy/sweet/acidic than is strictly comfortable. A natural inclination might be to shake this over ice extremely enthusiastically, break up the ice, and chill it as much as possible, then serve it in a stemmed glass to keep it cold.

Or — hear me out on this — drink it over ice in a rocks glass like a grownup.

There's something about drinking from a rocks glass that brings a sense of maturity to the proceedings. More to the point, a rocks glass lets you use rocks. The intensity of this cocktail will limit you to small sips at first, which will give the ice time to melt a little and bring the intensity down, while keeping everything ice cold.

With a nudge, this could have been a tiki drink, and probably a good one, but the right glass, much like the right tie, brings maturity and the faintest of confident Mona Lisa smiles.

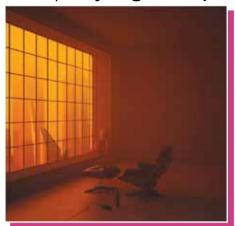

POP CULTURE

MUSIC. BOOKS. MOVIES AND MORE

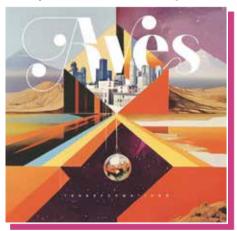

Kartell, Everything Is Here (Roche Musique)

Debut LP from this French producer, who broke through in 2012 owing to his distinctly accessible electronic tuneage, which is possessed of warmth, soul and melancholia. The background is that he grew up as a lad listening to his dad's soul, disco and early house collection, and his early stuff led to a residency at Paris' velvet-rope Social Club and getting booked globally at all the ritzy places from California to South Korea. Opening track "Space Odyssey" is clamorous and epic, along the lines of M83 when it gets going at around the midpoint; it immediately proves he takes a lot of time cobbling his low-

BPM compositions (yes, we need more of that in this world). We also have "Quest," a disco/LMFAO-inspired afterparty joint featuring St. Lucia artist Poté that's not near as annoying as it might look on paper. It's no wonder this guy's doing so well; this stuff is custom-engineered to fill floors with idle trust-funders. A+—Eric W. Saeger

Aves, Transformations (Kieku Records)

Retro futurism-informed album from this three-piece Helsinki, Finland-based outfit, its lyrics encompassing "all change; from man to woman, from adolescence to adulthood, from grief to hope." Lot of dreamy synth pop goes on here, starting with "Silent Solitude," a meditative, loop-filled ride built around a cloudy, barely discernible vocal that'll make some listeners think of Sigur Rós (appropriate, given that all the contributors here — including Icelandic artist JFDR and Danish singer Lydmor obviously cut their teeth on Nordic pop and adjacent genres); it's a melancholy, sexless but expansively hopeful thingamajig that'd fit in fine on a neo-hippie coming-of-age film (they're in talks to write the soundtrack for a film about conversion therapy, while we're at it). The next song, "Gem Of The Ocean," starts with the same sort of deep-reverb breathiness as the previous one but then takes a more in-your-face tack, the super-pretty vocal sounding more digitally present. More of this, please. A+—Eric W. Saeger

PLAYIIS"

A seriously abridged compendium of recent and future CD releases

- Yikes, Friday, April 12, looks to be a real humdinger of a day for new albums, look at 'em all, folks. Yep, we're gearin' up for a hot summer of singles from bubblegum Taylor Swift wannabes, corporate hip-hop bros, disposable indie bands and of course heavy metal bands, because metal never rests, unless it gets too hot to wear suits of armor or whatever they're doing now! But wait, it's storytime, because look who has a new album coming out, that's right, it's New York City's perennial arena-band-opening act Blue Öyster Cult, with a new "slab" called Ghost Stories! Yes, the band that gave us the unlistenable dentist-office classic tune "Burnin' For You" is at it again, and for that I thank them, because they should be out and about making more albums that only five people buy, because they are fun-loving rascals! Years ago I was at some outdoor show in Loudon, New Hampshire, or whatever, where they were opening for Savoy Brown, and my date and I were standing around with the keyboard player and the drummer while some wicked-long-haired dude was trying to sell them a bag of herbs that he claimed would "bring their youth back." Anyway, Eric Bloom — the guy with the cool voice who sang "Black Blade" and whatnot — comes walking up, grabs the bag and keeps going without paying this feller, and I started cracking up because I knew the guy wasn't ever going to get paid for his bag of snake-oil lawn clippings or whatever they were. But anyway, I love the BÖC, even though they've done some really dumb songs, so I hope this album is totally rockin', like they say. Ack, oh noes, the opening tune, "Don't Come Running To Me," is just a mellow version of "Don't Fear The Reaper," their big hit from a hundred years ago when Abraham Lincoln was president. I'm just glad I didn't have my hopes up.
- Ugh, what else do we have, hopefully something fun, eh wot? Yikes, Bob's your uncle, it's that British sax player dude, Shabaka, of Shabaka and the Ancestors! He was in avant-Afrobeat quartet Sons of Kernet and jazz-tronica band The Comet Is Coming, none of which probably means anything to you, but he is an interesting music human, this feller. His debut solo album, Perceive Its Beauty, Acknowledge Its Grace, is out this week, and it is said to highlight his mad skills on such flute-related instruments as the Mayan Teotihuacan drone flute, Brazilian piano, Native American flute and South American quenas. Do you know what this means? I do not, but I'm going to listen to this balderdash right now, because anything's better than a new Britney Spears album or whatever other horrors are in store this year! Hm, this is actually interesting, the single, "I'll Do Whatever You Want." It's got an early techno vibe to it, some krautrock feel, sort of forlorn and underproduced like Daedelus, and whichever type of flute he's playing does lend a soothing feel to it.
- Buzzard Buzzard is from Cardiff in the U.K., and their newest is titled Skinwalker. Frontman/ and producer Tom Rees says the album is his attempt at "consolidating my 2020 obsession with Sly and the Family Stone with my 2021 obsession with David Bowie's album Low," so let's see how that all panned out, that'd be great. OK, the single, "National Rust," is a cross between Pavement and '90s grunge, which, turns out, is a workable recipe. Lazy indie rock for sitting around while unemployed, that's my take.
- Lastly we have another Englishperson, jungle/drum and bass singer/DJ Nia Archives, with Silence Is Loud. The title track is a rinseout, all right, with some from-the-mountaintop vocals and plenty of melody. I don't mind this at all. Eric W. Saeger

Cool Food, by Robert Downey Jr. and Thomas Kostigen (Blackstone Publishing, 320 pages)

The actor Robert Downey Jr. was at a bookstore in London when he asked a clerk where to find the books on climate. The clerk's reply: "Oh, the bummer section? It's over there."

When Downey later told this story to the writer Thomas Kostigen, with whom he was developing a TV show, Kostigen one if I were inclined to eat one for dinner. (I amd make it fun."

An ordinary person not immersed in climate activism might wonder what climate and food have to do with one another. But the growing of food and the tending of animals that will become food are almost as large a part of this conversation as fossil fuel, because, well, carbon.

And to Downey and Kostigen, one way to combat a warmer planet is to eat cooler food — "cool" food is climate-friendly food, they say. And to promote it, they're out with a bulky, hard-to-hold cookbook that doubles as a climate manual, irritatingly populated with cartoon-style sketches of themselves. Cool Food isn't sure if it wants to be a cookbook, a graphic novel, a fourth-grade science book or a press release, and so there are elements of all four.

To be fair, I am a boomer, and not the target audience of this book — in fact, to climate change activists, my generation is the villain. And young readers of physical books prefer manga and graphic novels, recent studies have shown. So that concludes my grumbling about the physical presentation of the book, and we can move onto the actual content, which is — not terrible. Well, it's also not great, but as Books Written By Celebrities With Co-Authors go, Cool Food is surprisingly useful at times. I learned things, things which you may already know, but somehow I did not: like what the numeric codes on produce at the grocery store tell us other than the price (five-digit codes that begin with 9 indicate the produce was organically grown and codes that begin with 8 indicate genetic modifications) and where I could buy jellyfish and how to cook one if I were inclined to eat one for dinner. (I am not.)

Also, I learned that in New Mexico there are Native American restaurants, and apparently nowhere else, and that 95 percent of yams are grown in Africa while most sweet potatoes in U.S. supermarkets were grown in North Carolina.

The first half of the book focuses on foods that the authors say are climate-friendly because of how they are harvested or grown: ancient grains, fruits, vegetables, sea vegetables (yes, they will tell you how to grow your own seaweed), nuts and, most important for New Hampshire residents, syrup, although the authors are shilling for Vermont syrup here.

Also this section of the book gave me a lot of new things to worry about that I've never known I should be worrying about, such as whether grain crops are seasonal or perennial. "When a seasonal crop is harvested, it loses all of its carbon intake and depletes the soil of 40 percent of its carbon content. All that carbon is released into the air, adding significantly to climate change," the authors write.

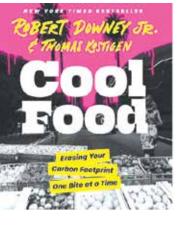

We're hearing a lot about regenerative agriculture these days, but a lot of the foodstuff mentioned here was unfamiliar to me: kernza flour, loquat fruit and pigeon pea shrubs. Nothing you find at your typical drive-thru. The recipes, accompanied by color photographs, run the gamut from intriguing (maple and chili glazed sweetcorn) to the bizarre (cashew stir-fry with puffed amaranth, which contains something called vegan fish sauce).

It was a relief to move on to the second section of the book, which contains no small amount of proselytizing about things like the farm-to-table movement, eating seasonally and organically, and cutting down on food waste. Not until the end does Cool Food address in any serious way whether all these foods are good for the human body - most of the talk is about what foods are good for the planet. When the authors finally give a nod to this, it's in an effective takedown of the federal government's dietary guidelines, once known as the food pyramid, now known as MyPlate. Well, actually, it's Harvard University's takedown, but they reprint it here in a chart that points out what the government says are healthy foods and ideal portions, and what Harvard nutritionists say. Let's just say that there must be government lobbyists for potatoes and hot dogs.

The authors did not want to write a "bummer" climate book, and have largely succeeded at that. They have instead created an eating manual for climate worriers (which is pretty much all of us after this "winter") and may struggle to find an audience outside of the most fervent activists and Robert Downey Jr. superfans. That said, the future is on their side; labeling that indicates the carbon footprint of foods — e.g., the amount of greenhouse gasses released in their production — is already cropping up on menus and food for sale. Those labels, Downey and Kestigen say, offer "the biggest promise for change." But also, eat more jellyfish. C – Jennifer Graham 👊

THE ROUND UP Local music news & events

By Michael Witthaus mwitthaus@hippopress.com

- Victory lap: In a show rescheduled from last October for health reasons, Buddy Guy performs, part of his Damn Right Farewell tour. The blues legend's contribution to rock 'n' roll is incalculable; guitarists from Jimi Hendrix to Stevie Ray Vaughan have cited him as an influence. Joining Guy is Bobby Rush, a blues singer who turned 90 last November and shows no signs of slowing down. Thursday, April 11, 7 p.m., Capitol Center for the Arts, 44 S. Main St., Concord, $85.75 and up at ceanh.com.
- Local soul: An outgrowth of a monthly hip-hop gathering, Sound Off Funk & Soul Night has The Evolutionists fusing classic soul samples with hip-hop and R&B. They're led by married couple Ruby Shabazz and Fee the Evolutionist, with a rhythm section of Zeke Martin and Dom Davis on drums and bass, along with Joe Mazzarella on keyboards. Shawn Caliber hosts, with DJ Myth performing on turntables. Friday, April 12, 9 p.m., Shaskeen Pub, 909 Elm St., Manchester; the 21+ show is $5 at the door
- Favorite son: Starting in 1996 with the multi-platinum Bringing Down the Horse, The Wallflowers has been a band in name only, its singular vision guided by front man Jakob Dylan, who once said, "no one lineup ... ever made two records [and] one person is actually putting the ideas together ... that's always been me." Saturday, April 13, 8 pm., Colonial Theatre, 609 Main St., Laconia, $49 and up at etix.com.
- Shape-shifters: Enjoy an afternoon folk concert from Eloise & Co. The duo of accordion player Rachel Bell and fiddler Becky Tracy often expands to a trio that includes a guitar or piano player, along with backing vocals. The group delves into everything from French folk ballads to Celtic reels, waltzes and traditional Quebecois tunes, and is a favorite in the regional contra dance scene. Sunday, April 14, 3 p.m., Monadnock Folklore Society, 7 Nelson Common Road, Nelson, $20 at monadnockfolk.org.
- New country: The Southern rapper Struggle Jennings hits the beach for a 21+ show. The grandson of Outlaw Country pioneer Waylon Jennings, he was in the lineup when Jelly Roll stopped by Meadowbrook last summer for a sold-out show. His music pulls from a variety of genres. Tuesday, April 16, 7 p.m., Wally's Pub, 144 Ashworth Ave., Hampton, $25 at ticketmaster. com.

Agent provocateur

Challenging comedy from Daniel Sloss

By Michael Witthaus mwitthaus@hippopress.com

Jokes can be made about anything, Daniel Sloss believes; nothing is off-limits. Among the topics the Scottish comedian has tackled are his sister's death from cerebral palsy, toxic masculinity and a close friend being raped by a man they both knew. What's most remarkable is that his act comes off as a TED Talk with punchlines — pain that's very, very funny.

Speaking via Zoom recently, Sloss said he strives for balance on stage.

"I think you can and should make jokes about anything, but just because you're making fun of something ... doesn't mean you have to be disrespectful or disparaging," he said. "You can be provocative and empathetic at the same time; I think there's a responsibility on the comedian to do both."

In 2018's Jigsaw, he mocked relationships with brutal efficiency. "We have romanticized the idea of romance, and it is cancerous," he snarled. "People are more in love with the idea of love than the person they are with." Acknowledging this would lead most to break up with their partners, he said, and asked for anyone who decoupled to let him know.

Hundreds of thousands of replies arrived, among them requests to autograph divorce papers. Sloss celebrated this outcome when he taped his Socio special in 2019. Since then, however, he's married and welcomed a son. As he prepared to launch an American tour of his latest show Can't, he sounded almost sheepish.

Jigsaw was, he said, "a very angry show [written] after a particularly bad break-up. I didn't know it was going to have the effect it did, but I'm very glad it did. It does mean that whenever I talk about my wife on stage, people are like, 'Oh, you're a hypocrite' and I'm like, 'I can't believe I have to explain this again.' But ... that's the job."

It's work Sloss began doing at a young age, achieving quick success early on. He was 17 when he did his first sets; two years later, in 2009, his Teenage Kicks show made him the youngest comic to have a solo run in London's West End. So his rant on modern love may just have been a twentysomething's passion talking, though he claims data proves him right.

In Socio he turned his knives on wokerthan-thou leftism, noting that the right doesn't mandate a check in every box on their list. "You don't hate gay people? That's OK, you'll learn," he quipped. "Welcome aboard." In the new show, Sloss expands on that, going after cancel culture, or more to the point, disassembling the popular notion of getting canceled.

"People lose bits of work because of things that they've said in the past due to some people going on the internet to dig up all their old dirty history, and I acknowledge that," he said. "I do think there's a lot of false flags. I think a lot of comedians claim they're being canceled when they're not. They're just getting online feedback to a degree we've never had before."

Having just returned from a tour of India, where people are arrested for criticizing the government, it's clear Sloss finds the many snowflakes on this side of the world a bit daft. "We met a guy in Turkey who made a joke about some ancient prophet, and it wasn't even particularly offensive, but one person took umbrage, and he spent 10 days in jail. I've seen the cost and the consequences of real cancel culture."

That said, Sloss loves coming Stateside, and looks forward to traveling by bus with his family as his tour kicks off April 11 in Laconia.

"In America

"In America, I can make fun of any president that's ever been," he said. "I can say really awful things about them." But he especially enjoys the many contrarians who attend his shows.

"As much as people feel like people are more sensitive than they've ever been, I'm also finding that because of that, there is the other side of the spectrum where people are like, 'You can say whatever you want, we don't care,'" Sloss said. "They want me to know that they're not all soft and easily offended. Those are the people I try to make laugh."

SIGNS OF LIFE

Jeremy Clarkson, born April 11, 1960.

Aries (March 21 – April 19) We start with the BMW X6, which must receive my inaugural What Were They Thinking Of award. It's an honor.

Taurus (April 20 – May 20) Why, for instance, does a car have a steering wheel? Or pedals? Or a dashboard? No, really. Some questions are worth asking.

Gemini (May 21 – June 20) Unfortunately, there has always been one rather enormous problem with the Brera. How can I put this? It isn't very fast. ... You don't need a stopwatch to measure its 0 to 60mph time, or even a calendar. You need think a bar established in 1956 is 'old' a geologist. Use the right tool for the job.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22) Criticizing the little Daihatsu for not being sporty is a bit like criticizing Postman Pat's van potatoes. Yav for Postman Pat!

Leo (July 23 – Aug. 22) The dash, for instance, looks lovely, but like so many things that look lovely loon pants, for example — it doesn't work very well. Don't wear bell bottoms for biking.

Virgo (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22) Golf is not mysterious. I understand absolutely why someone would play it once ... and then decide to play it again. ... It's because they think that if they keep playing, they might get a bit better. Nowhere to go but Libra (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22) You have to feel very sorry for the goat antelopes whose skin is used to make these [chamois leathers]. No, really. Really.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) Think of [the Porsche 911 Carrera GT2] as a carbon fibre fishing rod. It will make you look seri-

All quotes are from Round the Bend, by ous and keen among your peers. But one day, you're going to snag it on an overhead power line. And ... you're going to wish you'd stuck with a bamboo cane and a piece of string. Bamboo is underrated.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21) But what's the point of a big glass sunroof the size of a tennis court if it doesn't open? To see the light?

Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19) Then there's ... the Volvo sat nav system, which, no matter what you tell it, simply picks a destination you've been to recently and sends you there instead. Do you know where you're going?

Aquarius (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18) If you then you will not understand the idea of next week. So why bother building for it? There's old and then there's old.

Pisces (Feb. 19 - March 20) For milfor not being any good at making mashed lions of years, the top speed a human could achieve was 40mph and even then only if he had a very good horse. Pick up your pace.

SOLUTIONS

Find the 7 words to match the 7 clues. The numbers in parentheses represent the number of letters in each solution. Each letter combination can be used only once, but all letter combinations will be necessary to complete the puzzle.

Democracy in Action

As the November presidential election looms, with incumbent Joe Biden, 81, and former President Donald Trump, 77, squaring off again, some American voters would like to see literally anybody else on the ballot — and Literally Anybody Else, of North Richland Hills, Texas, wants to give them that chance. A 35-year-old seventh-grade math teacher and U.S. Army veteran who legally changed his name from Dustin Ebey, the candidate says his goal is to inspire change. "America should not be stuck choosing between the 'King of Debt' (his self-declaration) and an 81-year-old," reads the declaration on Else's campaign website. "Literally Anybody Else isn't just a person, it's a rally cry." NBC-5 Dallas Fort Worth reports that Else needs the signatures of 113,151 registered voters who did not vote in the presidential primary, by May 13, in order to run as an independent candidate. NBC-5, March 28

Ssssurvivor!

The BBC reported that the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals were recently called to a residence in Spennymoor, County Durham, to rescue a 3-foot-long corn snake atop a garage roof; the snake had escaped a crow that attempted to carry it off. When a neighbor came by to see the rescued critter, she recognized it as her pet snake, Agnus, who had been missing for a year. RSPCA inspector John Lawson was surprised the snake had survived out in the cold for so long. "The vet believes Agnus had gone into brumation mode, similar to hibernation, and her body had shut down in order to survive," Lawson said. Agnus received treatment for a respiratory infection before being reunited with her owner. BBC, March 28

Ghastly

After having lurked quietly on the shelves of Harvard's Houghton Library for the better part of a century, the philosophical meditation "Des Destinees de l'Ame" has undergone a facelift, according to a statement issued by the library in March. The book was acquired by the school in 1934, along with a note explaining the process of preserving human skin. The book's previous owner, an eccentric French bibliophile named Dr. Ludovic Bouland, claimed to have added the "human touch" (read: human skin) to his prize because "a book about the human soul deserved to have a human covering." The cover's origin could not be confirmed until 2014, and NBC News reported that this eventually led to an ethical review in 2023 and the recent decision to rebind the book in something less macabre. *NBC. Youth Inaction

- · Young people are cutting loose and losing their blues in Cambodia, but rather than embracing the "Footloose" of it all, the Guardian reports that Prime Minister Hun Manet is cracking down on the source: vehicle owners and operators who replace their cars' standard horns with ones that blast popular tunes. So enticing are these familiar refrains that young Cambodians are literally dancing in the streets, which the prime minister says poses a traffic hazard. He has directed the ministry of public works and transportation, along with Cambodia's police force, to crack down on vehicle operators whose horns emit anything other than the standard honk. Guardian, March 19
- Students and parents at Alston Ridge Elementary in Cary, North Carolina, have been dealing with a unique carpool annoyance: an aggressive pest of a turkey. WTVD in Durham reports that the bird pecks at cars, windows, people any perceived threat in "his" territory. "This was a young male turkey who probably was looking for a mate … and was unable to find one," said Cary Animal Services Officer Beth Wilson. "He was trying to claim a territory, and I guess he decided the carpool lane was going to be it." Wilson predicts Lonely Tom will chill out — just as soon as his hormones die down. WTVD, April 3

Heart in the Right Place

Thinking she had spotted an abandoned baby hedgehog on the side of the road, an animal lover in England carefully gathered the creature into a box lined with newspaper and took it home, setting out some cat food and leaving it undisturbed overnight. After realizing it hadn't moved or eaten, she took the box to Lower Moss Wood Nature Reserve & Wildlife Hospital in Cheshire the next morning, where hospital manager Janet Kotze "realized ... it wasn't a hedgehog." The fluffy, spiky, hedgehog-colored "creature" was actually the pom-pom from a winter beanie. Because the elderly rescuer had kept her distance through the night, she hadn't noticed the ball's lack of eyes or ears. But her compassion melted the staff members' hearts; Kotze said the woman "did absolutely the right thing — aside from the fact that it wasn't a hedgehog." NY Post, March 27
